How many perished by the way outright; how many more won the race and landed at the foot of the treacher ous peak, exhausted and spent with the fear'ul overland journey, to find that their hopes of speedy wealth were mocked by the coveted prize, to find that success in amassing gold was not the highway to hap piness. THE anti prohibition speakers make s great mistake in trying to defend the use of raining lives, destroying homes and bringing shame, crime and misery not only upon ful cyclone swept it in August of last year those who tarry long at the wine cup, but and now it is nearly destroyed by an earthnpon the unfortunate ones entrusted to their care and dependent upon them for World. comfort and support, They ought also to admit that temperance is a blessing as much to be commended as the curse of strong drink is to be condemned. The issue is not whether temperance is or is not a good thing, greatly to be sought, but whether prohibition is the best and surest man, ner of dealing with an evil that all moral men admit is a blighting one. That is the only question to be argued and really the only one to be decided and the anti-prohibitionist should pin their opponents in speech to this simple proposition and not allow them to monopolize the sympathies of their audiences by their appeals to the eentimental nature.

IT is the sheerest nonsense and the most inexcusable of follies to attempt to defend that which is indefensible-the intemperate use of liquor. It can not be successfully done and he who attempts it gets only censure for his pains. There is a question however whether prohibition will prove the cure-all for the evil and it should be discussed and decided calmly and dispassionately. Many good people go off half-cocked under the belief that it is the king of remedies and denounce unstintingly those whose observation has taught them that it matter of policy. They are as honest in their belief as the prohibitionists and ought not to be classed as whisky men because they can not see as well as their wiser brethren. In this free country a man has the right to think and act as he pleases, provided he does not please to interfere with the privileges of others, and we for one shall altar. not fall out with him for exercising that right. If prohibition carries, as we are inclined to think it will, no one will strive harder to have it strictly enforced than we and the advocates may count on our warm. est support. In the meantime we are not eatiefied that it is the true policy to adopt, We are uncompromisingly against whisky but since experience shows that it will be sold, we believe in making it pay its part to the support of the government. If a majority think otherwise, however, and adopt the law. we shall, as we do all others upon the statute book, urge its strict enforcement.

ANOTHER earthquake shook terror stricken Charleston Friday night, adding to the work of destruction and running up the long list of killed and wounded, which now number 63 and over 100 respectively. Two-thirds of the buildings of the cityespecially those of brick-are either in ruins or are damaged to such an extent that they will have to be rebuilt or repaired. The loss to the city is estimated at $10,000,000, and there is a proposition to call upon the Government for loan of that amount to aid in the prosecution of the work of repairing the damage. For several days and nights thousands of people sought safety in the the parks and open spaces of the city, fearing to return to their devastated homes and a feeling of panic seemed to possess them. An exceedingly heartless case of mock nodesty is reported from Lake Idlewild in Massachusette A young man was out swimming, when he was taken with the cramps and called loudly for help from a passing boat in which were a young man and two young women. THE PROHIBITION CRUSADE.

In the American constitutional system the sovereign of the State is manifested by the exercise of the right (1) of Eminent Domain; (2) by the right to impose taxes: (3) by the exercise of Police Power. By virtue of the power first named, private property may be taken for public use, and public use only, upon just compensation For instance, the land of the citizen may be taken for the construction of railways, turn pikes, ferries, forts, arsenals and for such other things of which it can be said the use is public. Under the second named power the citizen is required to pay to the government a fixed tribute in consideration of the protection which the government, through its officiai channels, extends to him in the enjoyment of his life, his liberty and his property. Under the third named power called indifferently the police power of the State and the public police and economy, systems of rules are prescribed having in view the due regulation and the domestic order of the State, by which the inhabitants are bound to conform their general behavior to those rules of propriety and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his

If a law prohibiting absolutely the sale of spirituous liquor is defensible upon constitutional grounds, it is because it falls within the scope of the exercise, by the State, of its police power.

I affirm, let, that such laws can not constitutionally be made, by which I mean to say that the police power, working through the channels of legitimate legislation, can not reach out and take absolute and unqualified control of any article of traffic which may have a use not necessarily and unqualifiedly pernicious. I affirm, secondly, that if absolute prohibitory laws are not open to the objection named, they are still unwise, viewed from a moral point of observation; in conflict with the rules of political economy and destructive of the er d (temperance) which is professedly the object of this enactment. All legislation, affecting or otherwise relating to crimes and misdemeanore, is enacted by virtue of the police power of a government. The history of such legislation shows that it is limited to the restraint and in the punishment of ABUSES. The USE of property (and I employ the word in THE London Echo suggests Gen. W. J. a sense contradistinguished from abuse) is Landram as the republican candidate not and can not be interfered with by any against Gov. McCreary. The General is a government of constitutional limitation. good man, too good in point of fact to be The 21 and 31 sections of the Bill of Rights needlessly elaughtered and sacrificed as he (Constitution of Kentucky) declare "That would be should he be placed upon such an absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty and property of freemen exists no-THE primary election in the Fourth die- where in a Republic, not even in the largest trict, Saturday, resulted in the selection of majority; and that the right of property is Hon. And this brings us directly back to the original proposition, that constitutional legislation in such cases must concern itself with abuses exclusively. The exercise of my rights over my property in such manner as that I do not injure the rights of my -- Only two or three people up here felt neighbor, is a legitimate use of property. This is secured to me by the fundamental law. For my protection in the enjoyment of this right, I pay tax to the goverment. The exercise of my rights over my properdroves. Geo. Fish and John Cook killed ty in such manner as that I interfere with

For such abuse, the party injured may sue me in a civil action, and, beside, the government may prosecute me by indict-Instruction," is the way the new county su- ment. The distinction should be kept in mind. The use is a legal thing.

The Abuse is an illegal thing. Propmankind. This animal is put, by his owner, to various uses, and, indeed, to various utilities. But it is possible that the use on a crowded highway, to the great danger of the public. For this abuse, the longer if the circumstances seem to require highway. But one would scarcely suppose that the Legislature or "even the largest majority" could legally require the owner to kill his herse or to keep him in his own enclosure, because of the liability to the once. Those whose terms expire expect to abuse! Property in Railroads is growing common. The use is largely beneficial to mankind. But eyen this character of property may be diverted, by the method of gravest abuses. The live stock of the proprietors of the land through which they run, may be recklessly killed; the lives of heard to say that legislation should either prevent, restrain or retard the use because of the liability to, and frequent occurrence of, the abuse? Illustrations might be multiplied indefinitely! These are sufficient for the purpose -to point out the distinction, wide and radical, between use and abuse, and to show further that the proy-Hquor in temperance and moderation.

The closer we analyze this question, the more clearly will the soundness of these views appear. Loyalty to government is the duty of the citizen. The political antithesis to this virtue is Treason. Treason is forbidden and is punished, because it is an abuse both of the duty of the subject and of the privilege which he enjoys. Homicide may not only be a lawful thing, but may be a proper thing to do. The sheriff kills a man, by hanging, in obedience to the mandate of a court. This is justifiable. One man slays another in the necessary defense of own life. This is excueable. But murder, which is the legal and moral antithesis to justifiable killing, is forbidden and punished. Why? Because it is the abuse of the right one man has, under given circumstances, to take the life of another! The acquisition of property is both sanctioned and encouraged by law. The abuse of the right to acquire is found in robbery, embezzlement, larceny and kindred crimes. Hence the law forbids and punishes the man who is guilty of these abuses! The manufacture, the ownership and the bearing of deadly weapons is allowed by law. Says the Con stitution: "The right of the citizens to bear arms in defense of themselves and the State shall not be questioned." But there may be an abuse of this privilege, and so the legislature has forbidden the carrying of such weapons concealed.

Playing at cards is deemed by law to be an innocent amusement, but even this sportive game is liable to abuse, and so legislation has been directed to the prevention of the abuse by forbidding that bets of money or property shall be laid upon the game.

I might thus run through the whole criminal code, and show that whenever the law interfers with the conduct of the citizen, either in respect to his own individual demeanor or in respect to his control and disposition of property, such interference does not touch the use, but is limited to the prohibition and the punishment of the abuse.

Now is any one foolish or fanatical enough to deny that spirituous, vinous and malt liquors all have their uses? Uses, too, which may be properly regarded as necessities! Each one of these liquors is used in cases of sickness upon the prescription of the most eminent physicians of the medical profession. One of them is used for church purposes upon sacramental occasions. Most of them are used is the very highest works of art and science-in mechanical operations, in chemical analyses, and in other and various departments of industry. As a beverage, used in moderation, the opinion of mankind may be divided as to whether they are healthful or deleterious. The same diversity of opinion exists as to coffee, tea and tobacco. There are not wanting skilled scientists who affirm that the nicotine of tobacco, the caffe ire of coffee, the tanin of tea and the alcohol of liquor are all kindred poisons, which are prejudicial to robust physical and mental development, while others contend that the stimulating principles of these various articles, at least retard the waste of the human system, which results from the physical and mental exercise. Leaving this issue to be discussed by men that in the opinion of mankind in general, spiritnous, vincus and malt liquors have a use, whether it be one of necessity or luxury. That this issue whether it be sacramental, mechanical, chemical, medicinal. luxurious or needful, can not lawfully be restrained by government is the proposition I affirm; but that the abuse which results in drunkenness and debauchery may be prohibited and ought to be punished, is affirmed with equal sincerity, and no less the legal rights of my neighbar, is an abuse candor. With what force of reasoning, I then inquire, can any advocate of probibition contend for the enactment of such legislation as will not simply restrain, but which will absolutely destroy a use (that is the sale of liquor for any purpose) which is not of itself pernicious. The mere sale of liquor injures no one, unless it be assumed that the purchaser expends his money for an article for which he does not get value received. Shall government then descend to say what is and what is not needful to for the citizen, what he shall buy and wha he shall not buy? Is the government a guardian and are the people all ward-? Shall we have furnished to us by the legis lature a schedule of articles with fixed prices, coupled with a mandatory clause saying, "This you need and this you do not need"? Every housekeeper in the land with a reasonable amount of money has daily upon his table something which he might dispense with, viewed from a narrow utilitarian point, he does not need. Shall government interfere and cut off the extravagance? Every man of decency has some article of wearing apparel which in the same narrow and ascetic sense, did not amount to the value given when he bought amount to the value given when he bought Chemicals, of the improvidence? I repeat that the mere sale of liquor is in no sense evil or pernicious. To get to the evil one must jump over the sale, omit the use and lodge on the abuse. But the logic which can find the evil in the sale because it abounds in the abuse, will surely not stop, in its wanderings at liquor. It should include the sale of morphine, because the purchaser may sometimes abuse its palliative use and become an opium eater. It should include arsenic, because the purchaser, using it for cutaneous eruptions, might finally poison his whole system. It should include pork, because the purchaser desiring to give himself a vigorous muscular development. might eat too much and take dyspepsia. It should include tea, coffee and tobacco, for similar, but more ovious reasons.

DOES PROHIBITION PROHIBIT? - We had had the Probibitory law in this State for over sixteen years, and it did not probibit in in the towns where the majority was against it. For a little time it did, but not for long. It was practically a failure. Would it stand any better chance now? If the majority of the men and women in the State to day wanted a prohibitory law now, we should have it, and it would do good if the majority would enforce it. That is the simple truth. But if a prohibitory law could be got upon the statute book without the assent of the majority to live up to it, it would be a mock ery of all the hopes of temperance people. - [Har ford Courant.

DEAD-WALL ART WORK.

METHODS BY WHICH ARTISTIC THE-ATER PICTURES ARE MADE.

Amount of "Paper" Required by a First Class Company-Drawing on the Blocks and Cutting Out the Designs-Lithograph Department.

The average theater man growls at the show printing charges and swears at it, but he cannot help himself. The printing for a show on the road costs so much. No respectable company, or pretentious outfit, can approach a theatrical show printing place for less than from $300 to $600 down. That money must be put up. That covers the blocks alone and the artists' services. The blocks for a big forty sheet poster cost not less than $600. There are forty pine blocks; if they are all in one color it is not so much trouble, but if there are four colors, as there often are on a big show stand, it means 160 blocks, each cut with mathematical nicety and each to be put away on the printer's "standing galley," and kept. The printer tries to get his money in advance for the making of these blocks. They are of no use to him after the original party has them. Therefore he figures to get the first cost of blocks, engraving and storage down, and he is then ready to treat for time on the balance -that is, paper, press work and profit.

A first-class theatrical company starting on the road takes from $1,000 to $3,000 worth of "paper." These are inside figures, so far as local figures go. Great combinations from than that, but within the year we have seen vety poor New York attractions fairly ering their paper between New York and Chicago, at a cost of not less than $3,000 money, for it does no good. The show printing of the country has had its greatest impetus from Barnum and the rest of the circus men. One thing must be said of Barnum, he believes always in printer's ink. He believes in it so much that he buys his own presses and his own ink for ordinary work because he wants so much of it. For the great engravings he, of course, employs proper talent. There is one a tist now in his employ who can cut a three sheet poster in two colors in one hour. It will not be a Raphael or a Correggio, but it will look like something when he has finished it.

DRAWING AND DESIGNING. Wooden blocks for theatrical printing are first drawn on the wood and then "cut around." The blocks are soft pine, perfectly dry, and are held like a vise when the man and his graver are digging out the picture, not so much art to cut on pine as it does to design. The man competent to take a scene plot of a play and fix up deadwall matter can in any first-class printing establishment command $50 a week. His chief skill comes in the drawing and designing of blocks, so that after he has a dozen or more made they shall result in a striking picture. His assistants receive from $30 to $22 a week. They are the "board cutters," as they are

The first block holds the drawing and makes the picture. The other blocks simply fill in the coloring. Thus a block or combination of blocks when made will print a complete picture, but it will all be in black. The coloring—red, blue yellow, green, etc.—is done by another series of blocks. Most of theatrical fancy printing is in four colors or combinations of colors. The first, or "key block," as it is called, costs $1.35 for the board, $5 for the designing or drawing the picture or part of a picture, and $4.60 for engraving. These blocks, therefore, cost about $11 each before the ink roller goes on them. Most of the "big stand work," as it is called, comprises from twelve to fifty-four sheets, the general size for large picture work being forty sheets. At $11 each for the blocks it will be seen, therefore, that a forty sheet engraving on a dead wall representing two fighting rhinoceroses, or a herd of leopards, or Mylesna-Coppaleen jumping off the rocks, or a procession of elephants, means the expenditure of about $450 before a single sheet is rua through the press.

But it is in the lithographing department of a big show printing house that the money is made, and wherein artists earn their fame. The best show work is now all done on stone. The first stone, like the key block, is the expensive one. The stone costs according to the time it is required to hold one picture. The designing and engraving are a little more expensive, but the printing, on the other hand, is a trifle cheaper. As a rule the deadwall lithographs are not so large as the wood cuts, still they often run as large as thirty-two sheets in size. Several of the circus posters now visible on the fences will run to that size. They cost about eight cents a sheet. The cost of a thirty-two sheet picture, aside from the cost of express charges, posting, etc., is about

THE NEEDS OF A SEASON.

A first-class attraction other than a circus, which of course uses much more paper, will consume in a season about 500 thirty-twosheet, 800 eighteen-sheet and 500 twelve-sheet pictures. These they divide up and often make smaller stands, but that is about the quantity of lithograph paper they will use. Of wood engravings they run from 1,000 to 5,000 sheets, and in ordinary letter printing they run about the same. A recognized attraction that employs that style of advertis ing will not expect to go on the road and finish the season without supplying the goats and the town scavenger with about $6,000 worth of paste and paper.

Very many of the show pictures of the better class are the work of excellent artists. The smaller lithographs, especially, are often meritorious and worthy of a better place in art than the bill poster's cart. There was one put out some time ago of Kate Castleton, as the little Quakeress, who used to sing "For Goodness Sake Don't Say I Told You." It was a full figure cut, with the daintiest foot and ankle, and the whole was surrounded by a litographed frame representing pink plush and hard wood. That picture is now on more private walls than it is on dead walls, and the reason is that the picture was tasty, modest and artistic. Barnum has some single sheet lithographs which illustrate the "key block" system. There are a variety of "single sheets," but all have the venerable showman's picture on the key block. Sometimes they put in a flying trapeze with a woman in tights; sometimes a horrible skeleton, again a chariot, again a clown, again a hippopotamus, and again a lot of wild Arabian chargers. These are all cuts made from one thirty-two sheet poster stand and segregated for saloon windows. They are mostly done in four colors, but there again the printer "nigs," for he does four colors in three. Black is one, the foundation—the key block. Yellow is another, blue another, and red. With the combinations of blue, yellow and red, an expert printer can make half a score of effects. -Chicago Herald.

There are only a limited number of first-class bachelors in the aristocracy of Britain, and the prince is anxious to have them mate with English gir's. But in spite of his wishes, Englishmen continue to marry American women. Even that most eligible of all British bachelors, the Duke of Portland, whom the Prince of Wales is reported to have selected for one of his daughters, is said to be fascinated with a young and beautiful New Yorker. "I looked into the matter," said Mr. Dow, "and was soon convinced that

> The change was made, and the paper was restored to its original basis. Its prosperity steadily increased. Just before the war broke out Mr. Dow's income from it was large. It was netting him $60,000 a year, and he described his business as the smoothest and most satisfactory possible. "I have no subscribers and no exchanges," he said. "I would not exchange with the best newspaper in the land, for it would be of no use to me. I do not copy from other papers-my matter is all original. As regards subscriptions, I think my system is better. The news company takes my entire edition each week. It gives me a check for it, which I at once cash, and thus my accounts are settled every seven days, and I know just where I am. The news company distributes the paper."

When the war broke out it hurt the circulalation of The Waverly, but the paper rallied later, and sent a great many copies out to the army. Mr. Dow was in receipt of an income which gave him great opportunities for investment. Had he dealt with them skilfully, he would have died worth millions.

A Unique Literary Enterprise and the Phenomenal Success Which Attended a singular example of the freaks of fortune, and, perhaps, a not altogether encouraging illustration of the prizes which come to men who cater to the reading taste of the public. Mr. Dow was originally an industrious and hard working printer. I made his acquaintance at this time. He was working in a printing office as a compositor. He was not so swift as younger men, his work was not constant, and he was able to make but $6 a week. This sum went further then than it gance like the present, but it would not support a family. Mr. Dow dropped his composing stick and determined to make a strike for a living in another direction. I met him nothing, and was poorer than ever. But he had then a scheme in his brain which he unfolded to me, and asked my opinion of it. It was to establish The Waverly Magazine. I told him it was as wild a project as was ever conceived; that there was no possibility of success in it. He said that was almost the universal opinion among those with whom he advised, and that no one had confidence enough in it to lend him the small sum of money with which he felt it necessary to
